The Department of English Guide to Graduate Study supplements the Graduate School website, which contains general regulations and deadlines on a wide range of academic and financial matters pertaining to graduate study. The Guide contains information about departmental regulations and requirements for the master's and doctoral programs and degree. When departmental regulations concerning a particular aspect of the program change during your tenure of study at Northwestern, you will ordinarily follow the rule in effect when you matriculated, except by permission of the Director of Graduate Studies. The Guide sometimes refers to general regulations of the Graduate School, but it must always be used in conjunction with the most recent update to the Graduate School website.

As a student in the Graduate School, you will at any moment be one of several thousand degree candidates, and during your stay here you will have to interact directly and indirectly with a set of bureaucracies that includes, among others, the Federal Government. It is your direct responsibility to keep abreast of the general regulations and deadlines of the Graduate School and to comply with them in a timely fashion. The Department will help you, but you should not rely on it to tell you what you need to do and when. While the Graduate School will be compassionate in dealing with difficulties that are beyond your control, equity and time constraints make it hard for rules to be bent when problems arise from students' negligence.

1. RESIDENCY, REGISTRATION, GRADES

1.1. Course and Registration Credits

If you are a full-time student in The Graduate School (TGS), credits are based on residence rather than credit hours. Three residency registrations are required for full-time standing in a given quarter. You may take a fourth course (including undergraduate 100-level language courses) without incurring tuition penalties. Consult the TGS website for regulations concerning residency and post-candidacy research.

Within the framework of TGS residency requirements, the English Department will determine the number and distribution of courses required for your particular program of study. In consultation with the Director of Graduate Studies (DGS), you will choose your coursework from courses offered in the English Department as well as in other departments and programs. The following registration levels and types can be counted toward full-time standing as a student in TGS:

- 300-level undergraduate courses: provided they are listed in CAESAR when searching for Course Career “Graduate School,” will confer credit towards your graduate degree.

- 400-level graduate courses: These are standard graduate seminars that form the core of your coursework.

- Eng 490 - Reading and Pedagogy: This registration carries no specific assignments or duties, but gives you time to prepare for exams or do your work as a teaching assistant. You will register for one unit in each of the three quarters of your 2nd year in the program. 490 registrations carry an automatic passing grade for students in good standing.

- Eng 499 - Independent Study: The formal graduate seminar offerings in English and other departments should be considered your primary means of earning credit for coursework. You should contemplate independent faculty supervised work for credit only if you are able to justify the exceptional urgency of the material or situation. All independent study requests must be reviewed and endorsed by the DGS in concert with the Graduate Policy Committee (GPC).

- 500-level graduate courses: These are special courses, such as Eng 570 - Teaching Composition (ordinarily taken during your third year in the program), but are not necessarily more advanced in nature than 400-levels; rather, they confer specific amounts of residency credit depending on a student’s year, standing, and funding status.

- Eng 590 - Research: Ph.D. students will be registered for Eng 590 during the Summer Quarters of their first and second years in the program, with the purpose of maintaining full student standing. M.A. students will register for Eng 590, most likely in the Winter Quarter, when you are working with your advisor on your Master’s thesis.

- TGS 500 - Advanced Doctoral Study: is the registration that you’ll use beginning in the Fall Quarter of your third year in the program, and will be your default registration in any quarter thereafter during which you are receiving funding, whether it be from internal or external sources. TGS 500 confers full residency status and all related benefits, including the TGS health insurance subsidy. It also obliges you to continue paying the Student Activity Fee.

- TGS 512 - Continuous Registration: In any quarter (with the exception of the summer) during which you’re not receiving funding, but are still within the terms of your degree completion deadline, you must register for TGS 512 (tuition: $100/quarter). This registration confers minimum residency status, continued access to email and other Northwestern online resources, library privileges, etc... but not the TGS health insurance subsidy. You do not pay the Student Activity Fee when registering for TGS 512

- TGS 513: If, for any reason, you haven’t completed your degree by the end of the summer of your 9th year in the program, you must register for TGS 513 (tuition: $1000/quarter) in every quarter up to, and including, that in which you submit your dissertation.

1.2. Transfer Credit

Ph.D. candidates who arrive with both a B.A. and an M.A. in English may, upon request, transfer two units of M.A. credit to be used in the Fall and Winter of the third year in place of taking a seminar P/N in each of those quarters. Transfer credits cannot be used in place of any of the required pre-/-post-1800 courses.

1.3. Grades

Your English instructors will often use intermediate (plus or minus) grades, and these will appear in departmental records. TGS will also record letter grades with the same distinctions on your official transcript.

1.4. Incomplete Work

In order to remain in good standing for fellowships, you must make up any incomplete work from an academic year no later than two weeks prior to the beginning of classes in the following Fall Quarter. This rule supersedes any rule set down by TGS. We do strongly recommend that you complete all work for your courses before the beginning of the subsequent quarter whenever possible. In cases involving such unavoidable circumstances as illness or a death in the family, you may, on or before the deadline, submit a written petition for an extension to the DGS.

Be aware also that TGS and the Department both closely monitor incomplete work (grades of K - multi-quarter work ungraded, Y - incomplete, N - Not Pass, and X - Final Exam missed). While there are any incompletes on your record, you will be considered ineligible for Departmental or TGS travel funding, and will also be unable to advance to candidacy. Please see the section 3.3.3 on admission to candidacy for further details on the ramifications of a late advance to ABD status.

1.5. Departmental Evaluations

For every course you take in your first year of the doctoral program, your instructor will file a written evaluation on a standard form. A crucial part of your permanent record in the Department, they are given close attention in deliberations about continuation and fellowships. Students should consult them as they appear and use them in measuring achievement and planning goals. The graduate faculty—including GPC members, the DGS, and the Chair—may consult all student records.

1.6. Pre/Post-1800 Period Course Requirement

In order to insure that students become acquainted with literature from diverse historical periods and contexts, we require that all doctoral students take 8 courses, broken down along historical lines, prior to advancing to candidacy:

- 4 courses dealing primarily with literature written before 1800
- 4 courses dealing primarily with literature written after 1800

At least 3 courses from each group must be at the 400 level; the other in each case may be at the 300 level if it can be found in CAESAR when searching for TGS courses. Eligible courses cannot be audited or taken P/N. Ordinarily, Independent Study courses (499) may not be used to satisfy this requirement, nor may courses you took as an undergraduate. To have a CIC Traveling Scholar Program course count toward any of your requirements, you must get approval from the DGS. If a given course straddles the line, the instructor will determine how it should count. If you wish a course in literary theory to count for post-1800 credit, you will have to seek DGS approval and justify the relevance of the course to the literary canon after 1800.

1.7. The Ph.D. Language Requirement

Knowledge of a second language and some experience of literature written in that language are of extraordinary benefit in deepening one’s awareness of language as the medium of literature. The Department considers this benefit so valuable that it requires of all its doctoral students an advanced reading knowledge of a second language broadly relevant to the study of English and American Literature. Completion of the Language Requirement is a prerequisite for admission to candidacy.

Although the general Language Requirement exists independent of any connections to your particular research interests, you are encouraged to choose the language that will be most beneficial to you in the definition and pursuit of your research.

The Language Requirement may be satisfied in one of four ways:

- By passing the 3-hour translation exam.
- By earning a grade of A- or higher in a graduate course at Northwestern, which must be pre-approved by the DGS. The course must require readings in the original language, though it may be conducted in English. To fulfill the Departmental Language Requirement by this route, a student must take this course sometime in his or her first year in the PhD program. An Independent Study cannot satisfy the Language Requirement on its own. This does not prohibit a student from taking an Independent Study in a second language (taken as a fourth course); however, he or she would also be expected in this case to pass the foreign language exam.
- By earning a grade of A- or higher in a year-long undergraduate language course (taken as a fourth class in a student’s first year in the PhD program).
- By earning a grade of A- or higher in a summer intensive language course (taken the summer before or immediately after the first year).

This requirement should be satisfied before the beginning of a student’s second year.

During any summer in which you are receiving funding, you may take language intensive courses offered at participating Committee for Institutional Cooperation (CIC) schools. Funding may also be available for incoming doctoral students to undertake intensive summer language instruction before the first academic year. Incoming students are advised to consult with the DGS as early as possible if they would like to pursue language instruction during the summer before their first year.

In the Summer Quarter or in early September, before the beginning of the first academic year, incoming graduate students will take the diagnostic exam used at Northwestern to determine the competence of entering freshmen in non-English languages. The student will take the exam in his or her chosen language in consultation with the DGS and the appropriate Northwestern language department or program/Northwestern Council on Language Instruction. This diagnostic exam does not fulfill the departmental language requirement, but serves as a guide to a student’s level of proficiency. If the student tests at second-year proficiency or above (i.e. if the student would fulfill the Weinberg College of Arts and Science [WCAS] Language Requirement), s/he is advised to take the Language Exam as soon as possible. Students who have not yet achieved second-language proficiency will pursue one of the other options.

In addition to the Department’s Language Requirement, students specializing in Medieval Literature must pass a 3-hour translation exam in Medieval Latin, offered by the University of Toronto in September and April of each year. There is a $50 registration fee for this exam, for which the Department will reimburse you if you pass. Please note that although passing the Toronto exam is a strict requirement for all Medievalists, it is not considered a candidacy requirement. As long as the student has fulfilled the Department’s Language Requirement by the time they’re advancing to candidacy, not yet having passed the Toronto exam will not delay the process. An non-credit Medieval Latin Workshop is offered every quarter throughout the year. For other languages, reading groups of a similar sort may be offered, depending on interest and the availability of those with sufficient fluency in the language in question.

The Language Requirement is normally waived for students whose native language is not English.

2. THE M.A. PROGRAM

2.1. Coursework

As a student in the Department of English’s Master’s degree program, you will take a total of eight classes over your three quarters, plus a ninth (the Independent Research Seminar, designated English 590) with your Master’s thesis advisor. Your advisor must be a member of the English Department graduate faculty, to be chosen in consultation with our DGS.

You have a number of different options in the distribution of your coursework:

- At least three of your eight overall seminars must be at the 400-level, though you’re of course free to take as many such classes as you like.
- You may arrange to take advanced undergraduate classes at the 300-level, with additional graduate-level requirements specifically designed and supervised by the faculty member teaching the course. The instructor in such cases must be a member of the Northwestern graduate faculty. Check with the Graduate Program Assistant if you have any questions about whether a given professor falls in this category.
- Up to three of your eight courses can also be offered by another department.
- We recommend, though it is not required, that you take our Fall Quarter Introduction to Graduate Studies seminar (English 410) with our incoming doctoral class.

2.2. Master’s Thesis

Your Master’s thesis, of about 6,000-8,000 words, may be either new work or a more ambitious development of work completed in one of your courses. By the end of your first quarter, and with the help of the DGS, you must have found a member of the English Department graduate faculty who will agree to act as your thesis advisor. You’ll be registering for the Independent Research Seminar (English 590) with them in the Winter Quarter, with the goal of completing as much work as possible on the thesis.

In the third quarter, you must have a completed thesis, that meets the approval of your advisor, submitted by a deadline determined by the Department. This date will be communicated to you during the summer prior to matriculation, but will be as close to the 5th week of the Spring Quarter as possible. The approved thesis will be submitted to the DGS for their endorsement.
2.3. Regulations on Degree Completion

The default schedule laid out for the completion of the Master’s program assumes that you are planning to have finished all coursework and the thesis in time to graduate at the end of the Spring Quarter. However, if you need more time to polish the final document, you also have the option of submitting the thesis for review in the Summer Quarter. This would result in your degree being conferred in early September, but without additional tuition expense. Pursuit of this alternative schedule must be agreed upon by the DGS and your thesis advisor no later than the end of the Winter Quarter.

According to TGS regulations, a student in the Master’s program has 5 years from the initial quarter of matriculation to complete all degree requirements. You will be required to register for TGS 512 (tuition $100/quarter) for each academic quarter in which you aren’t enrolled in coursework, to maintain minimum student standing. This will include Fall, Winter, and Spring Quarters, but you will not be required to register in the Summer. Not registering during the academic year will result in discontinuation from the program, which can only be reversed by submitting a petition for readmission and paying a fee determined by TGS.

3. THE PH.D. PROGRAM

3.1. The First Year of the Doctoral Program

The Ph.D. program provides scholarly training in the history and criticism of literature written in English and in literary theory. The aim of our regulations governing the first three years of doctoral work is to guide you in a course of study that will give you a broadly based historical knowledge of English and American Literature and lead you toward an informed choice of the field in which you propose to write a dissertation. Whether you enter with a B.A. or M.A., the first year of the doctoral program will consist of course work.

Your goal in the first year will be to explore the range of options in literary study generally and the particular resources of the Northwestern faculty as you approach the choice of your field of specialization. Specifically, you will;

- take Eng 410 (“Introduction to Graduate Studies,” see 2.1.2.) in the Fall Quarter and eight other courses throughout the year to develop both your general knowledge and your particular interests.
- fulfill the Language Requirement
- undergo a Spring Quarter First Year Review, conducted by the GPC. The Graduate Faculty as a whole will consider the Committee’s recommendation and decide on your continuation (see 2.1.5. below).

3.1.1. Introduction to Graduate Studies

English 410, “Introduction to Graduate Studies,” is the one course required of all doctoral students. This course is designed to introduce students to library resources, research methods, scholarly endeavors such as textual editing, constructions and deconstructions of literary history and canons, influential theories underlying analytic and critical practices, the history of the profession of literary studies, and/or contemporary issues within and around the discipline.

3.1.2. The First Year Review

The satisfactory completion of all courses is a necessary, but not in itself sufficient, condition for continuation into the second year. That decision rests on the judgment of the graduate faculty that you have demonstrated the ability and motivation to plan a substantial scholarly project and carry it to completion within the time limits for the degree.

Toward the end of the Spring Quarter, the GPC will schedule a formal interview (45 minutes) with each first-year doctoral student. The interview will give you an opportunity to discuss your work, your interests, and your plans for the future, and it will give the committee a chance to assess your progress over the year. To serve as a basis for discussion, the committee will ask you to submit in advance one paper that you consider representative of your work. The paper should involve research and documentation and be ideally 15–20 pp. in length—the committee will not consider papers shorter than 8 pp. or longer than 25 pp. While the paper need not be from your intended field of study, it should certainly demonstrate your theoretical interests and rhetorical strengths.

The essay submitted for evaluation should be free of any comments or corrections. Students may correct typos and refine phrasing of the original draft; they may also expand or edit papers as necessary. To ensure that the GPC can evaluate student work from the Spring Quarter, First Year Reviews will take place during Reading Week.

On the basis of your academic record in the first year and the interview, the GPC makes recommendations about continuation to the graduate faculty. The GPC reserves the right to recommend against continuation, even if a student’s performance in every course has been adequate, and/or to put a student on probation; in the latter case, a second-year review is required. The GPC is likely to make such a recommendation if weak performance in some areas has not been balanced by strong performance in others. The graduate faculty as a whole makes final decisions on all recommendations.

3.1.3. Planning the Second Year

If you are at all like other first-year graduate students, you will find that your coursework demands most of your energy. Nevertheless, it will be important for you to look ahead and to think about the directions your studies are likely to take from this point on. In the final weeks of the Spring Quarter and over the summer you should think seriously about possible fields of specialization, dissertation topics, and committees and plan some reading to advance you toward your goals. You should consult the standard Qualifying Exam lists (posted on the Department’s website) in order to develop a plan of reading for the summer and the second year. You are also advised to consider that you will be trained as a teacher in your second year. In the Spring Quarter, you may want to arrange to observe the section of one current graduate teaching assistants in order to prepare yourself for your initiation into the classroom.

3.1.4. The M.A. as Part of the Ph.D. Program

Having successfully completed the first year, you may receive a non-terminal Master’s degree upon application. A student not continued into the second year of the doctoral program still is eligible to receive the Master’s degree as long as she or he has satisfied the requirements of TGS.

3.2. The Second Year of the Doctoral Program

In the second year of the doctoral program, you will complete your pre/post-1800 requirements and take the first part of your Qualifying Exam.

You should map out a plan for moving toward your field of specialization in consultation with the DGS. Throughout the Fall and Winter Quarters, you will choose an advisory committee of three faculty members who will formally supervise your progress toward the degree after the successful completion of your first Qualifying Exam. This committee, which may go through changes of composition over the next two or three years, will serve successively as the committee for the written component (part 2) of your Qualifying Exam, your Prospectus Committee, and finally your Dissertation Committee. Technically, there is no dissertation director until you have been admitted to candidacy. However, most students select a dissertation advisor before taking the written Qualifying Exam.

3.2.1. Graduate Assistantships

You are likely to be funded by Graduate Assistantships beginning in your second year. In preparation for teaching, you will attend an orientation meeting at the beginning of Fall Quarter. You may also be assigned a Teaching Assistant Mentor who is a current graduate student in the Department. You will probably find the experience of teaching to be equal parts rewarding and exhausting. As you learn the basics of pedagogy (assuming you have no prior experience), you should keep in mind that a Graduate Assistantship is a part-time position (approximately 20 hours per week), and that your primary responsibility will be to move steadily toward your degree. Do not allow teaching to become all-consuming.

As a Graduate Assistant, you hold an appointment in TGS with duties assigned by the Department. It is your responsibility to keep abreast of all TGS regulations that relate to the appointment, remuneration, tax status, and academic standing of Graduate Assistants. Awarded by TGS on nomination by the Department, appointments of Graduate Assistants are not confirmed until the end of the Spring Quarter.

3.2.2. Eng 490 Registrations

In order to ease your workload in your first year as a graduate assistant, you will register for one unit of Eng 490 in the Fall, Winter, and Spring Quarters. Thus your normal course load as a graduate assistant will consist of two seminars and/or independent study courses in addition to the Eng 490.

3.2.3. Teaching Assistant Responsibilities

As a Teaching Assistant you will support instructors, normally in large undergraduate lecture courses. Your duties will include;
• reading all the books in the course,
• attending all lectures,
• leading up to two discussion sections (no more than fifty students in all) and grading their papers and exams,
• holding conferences with students and maintaining two regularly scheduled office hours per week (WCAS requires that these hours be held on two different days of the week and at two different times of day),
• returning the papers and exams of students in your discussion section(s),
• assisting the instructor in other tasks involved in running a lecture course.

For further details about teaching assistant duties, please consult the English Department’s Teaching Assistant Handbook, distributed at the start of each academic year. The assignment of Teaching Assistants to particular courses is the joint responsibility of the chair and the DGS, with advice from the Graduate Program Assistant. These decisions depend ultimately on enrollments at the undergraduate level. All involved shall make every attempt to give you assignments that either fit your interests or fill gaps in your coverage of literary periods, but the needs of the undergraduate curriculum must take precedence over other considerations (as it does for professors).

As a Teaching Assistant in the Department of English you may also be assigned to a Comparative Literature, Gender & Sexuality Studies, or other interdepartmental course taught by a faculty member from another department. The regulations of the English Department still apply to you in that case, and you should not be asked to teach more students than you would in an English course. Be sure to notify us if what is being asked of you falls outside the limits we have set.

3.2.4. The Qualifying Exams

The purpose of the Qualifying Exam as a whole is to test your command of the primary literature and your grasp of the relevant historical and theoretical contexts in the field in which you intend to write your dissertation. The Qualifying Exam is thus designed to cover an area larger than your dissertation and to qualify you generally to teach in a given field. The Qualifying Exam is divided into two parts: the first part is an oral exam, administered at the end of your second year, that asks you to demonstrate in-depth familiarity with a list of core texts in your field; the second part is a take-home written exam, administered at the end of the Fall Quarter of your third year, that asks you to demonstrate critical engagement with a selection of texts and research approaches that will inform your dissertation prospectus. The Department sets the texts and examiners for the first part of the exam; you draw up the list for the second part of the exam in consultation with a committee of three faculty members you have chosen.

3.2.4.1. The Qualifying Exam: Part One (Oral)

In the Spring Quarter of your second year, you will take the first part of the Qualifying Exam in a specified field. The Department currently offers Oral Qualifying Exams in the following fields:

• Medieval English Literature
• British Literature from 1500-1650 (also referred to as “Renaissance” or “Early Modern” Literature)
• Eighteenth Century British Literature
• Nineteenth Century British Literature
• American Literature
• Twentieth-/Twenty-First Century Modern Literature
• Twentieth-/Twenty-First Century Anglophone Literature
• Drama in English
• Poetry & Poetics

By the summer of your first year, you will select one of these fields and begin reading the standard field list. These lists are available from the first day you enter the program, and the DGS will have distributed the lists in all fields to you during your first year. The list that is in place when you matriculate is the list you can expect to be examined on.

All second-year students will take the exam during reading week of Spring Quarter of the second year. The two-hour oral exam is administered by a committee of three faculty members appointed by the DGS. Students are encouraged to meet with the DGS if they have questions and will be notified about the composition of the exam committee during the early stages of the Spring Quarter.

The oral component of the Qualifying Exam covers a list of core texts in the broad field you have selected. The list does not attempt to include every text important in the field or to establish a comprehensive canon. Instead, it designates a reasonably small set of texts that provides minimum competency in the literary forms of the period, national culture, or genre. Keep in mind that you will read more extensively and widely in preparing for the second part of the exam.

This first part of the Qualifying Exam is designed principally to test—and to help you demonstrate—detailed knowledge of the texts stipulated on the reading list. It focuses on the interpretive reading of these texts. You will be asked to show specific, detailed recall of literary works and an ability to offer a textured reading of the works at hand. You will also be expected to understand the basic terms and concepts necessary for literary study (epic, novel, figures of speech, and poetic terms). Questions will deal with the thematic patterns and artistic characteristics of individual works on the list and with significant interrelations among works. Broader questions about literary history (“discuss the main forms of Renaissance drama”) and about the relations of works to their historical, biographical, and cultural contexts are allowable, but only to the degree that they are immediately relevant to the understanding of, and are illustrated by, works on the list. “In what sense is The Woman in White a ‘sensation novel’?” is thus more suitable than “Discuss the relations of the ‘sensation novel’ to other styles of Victorian fiction.”

You will receive a grade of Pass or Fail for the oral exam. In the case of a failed exam, the GPC will meet with you that same week to determine whether a new exam will be scheduled or you will be asked to leave the program. Your committee will provide written comments in order to give both the student and the GPC a sense for what was considered lacking in the first exam.

In exceptional cases, students may petition the DGS and the Graduate Committee for an alternate Qualifying Exam field. To do so, a student must find three faculty sponsors and put together an alternate reading list during the fall of his or her second year. The GPC must then approve the alternate list before the student takes the oral exam at the end of the second year. Alternate fields must have a breadth and scope comparable to the standard fields.

3.3. The Third Year of the Doctoral Program

By the end of your third year, you should have completed all of the requirements of TGS for admission to candidacy: receiving a Pass on your Qualifying Exam, gaining approval of the dissertation prospectus, completion of all course work, and successfully passing the Department’s Language Exam.

The third year of the doctoral program is in many ways the most challenging because during the summer you will have begun an important transition. You move from completing specified assignments for particular courses and other set tasks to working more independently on goals of much greater scope, which you will have a far greater role in setting for yourself. While you will still receive guidance from faculty members (and should never hesitate to seek it at any point during the year), your achievements will depend increasingly on your own discipline, organization, ambition, and imagination. The third year completes your preparation for the largest task of your graduate study: the research and writing of your dissertation. In doing so, it advances you toward your ultimate goal of becoming a mature, self-motivated scholar, critic, thinker, and writer.

Coursework:

You may, if necessary, take your final two courses Pass/No Pass (P/N) with the approval of the instructor. If it is an English class or instructor, you may do so with the understanding that you will do reading as well as participate in discussions, but will be exempt from final research assignments. This is at the instructor’s discretion, and expectations should always be explicitly agreed upon before the beginning of the seminar. Do not assume that your professor understands the nature of the P/N grade, which is not equivalent to an audit.

3.3.1. The Qualifying Exam: Part Two (Written)

In the week before Fall Quarter of the third year, you will turn in your reading list to the DGS, approved and signed-off on by all members of your exam committee. The DGS will review each in order to maintain uniform standards across fields.

The second part of the Qualifying Exam is the more arduous of the two, because it demands wider reading of more texts and more refined analysis. While the Department sets the reading list for the first part of the exam, you will devise the reading list for the second part, in consultation with your committee.

3.3.1.1. Reading List for the Written Qualifying Exam

In the second part of the Qualifying Exam (hereafter “QE2”), you will focus on a body of texts and on a set of questions that you and your committee have identified as germane to a dissertation. The reading list that you develop, though narrower in focus than the standardized period list for the oral exam, should be deeper in its coverage, listing, in addition to primary texts relevant to your area of special investigation, secondary sources in theory, history, and previous criticism. Your goal is to construct a list that is not comprehensive but is, rather, motivated by the research questions you have broadly defined at this point. The list should be neither exhaustive nor too narrowly focused. It should reflect your interests with the end of enabling ongoing development and refinement of your ideas. At this time, you should reach out to three faculty persons with whom you wish to work as members of your written qualifying exam and dissertation committees. You must also secure the agreement of the individual who will serve as committee chairperson. The composition of your committee may change after the QE2, but it is optimum for you to begin your primary advisory relationships at the QE2 stage.

QE2 Reading List length varies. The number of items (“item” refers to books, articles, or in some cases collections) on recent lists has ranged from 90–125. You should aim for the middle. Consideration refers to books, articles, or in some cases collections) on recent lists. The number of items (“item” refers to books, articles, or in some cases collections) on recent lists has ranged from 90–125. You should aim for the middle of this range, although ultimately the list’s length should be justified by your intellectual and disciplinary concerns. Your list should be divided into major subfields. As you begin to ponder the list’s shape, brainstorm and consult your advisors about potential historical, critical, and/or theoretical categories. This is the time to delineate research fields that will help you articulate your emergent critical commitments. In this sense, the list itself is a research project, so you should think rigorously and creatively as you undertake this bibliographic and conceptual work.

The Graduate Program Assistant maintains a file of previously approved lists, which you should consult to get a sense of the scope, depth, and complexity expected. Remember that you must submit the reading list for your exam to the DGS in order to make sure that different comprehensive exams are comparable in scope from one field to the next.

3.3.1.2. The Written Qualifying Exam

No later than two weeks prior to the Qualifying Examination Part Two, all students must convene a meeting of all members of their exam committee for a 30-45 minute conversation about their reading lists, identifying areas of particular interest and avenues of further inquiry. At such meetings, which are not part of the examination itself, potential questions for the written exam may be discussed or developed.

The written exams are based, then, on this conversation and your reading list, and are intended to determine that you have read widely and intelligently enough in your field to be able to formulate arguments that go well beyond the interpretation of individual texts. This second part of the exam is a take-home examination, which must be completed in 10 days, with distribution the first morning and submission by noon on the last. It will normally be given to you on the Wednesday before Thanksgiving in the Fall Quarter of your third year and will be due the Friday of Reading Week. Ordinarily, the exam will consist of three or four questions, two of which you’ll address in separate response essays. The combined page length for the essays ideally will be 25 pp. (6,000 words) and must not exceed 28 pp. (8,000 words; double-spaced, standard margins); all essays must be handed in at the time specified when the exam is distributed.

The exam should consist of original work. While some conceptual overlap or resonance with your past seminar work may occur, you are not permitted to excerpt your prior seminar essays or any other previously composed writing beyond the length of a short citation (i.e., less text than would demand a block quote). If at any point in the exam you find it absolutely necessary to cite yourself briefly, you are required to place your citation in quotation marks and append a footnote or endnote that specifies your source (e.g. title, date, professor, and seminar in which the seminar essay was composed).

Your committee will not expect the argument of these essays to have the conclusive character of a dissertation chapter, nor will your essays necessarily represent elements of your eventual dissertation. Nonetheless, it is important at this point for you to think ahead, as you prepare for this exam, to the prospectus-writing stage, at which time you will need to have tentative hypotheses in hand in order to determine the direction of your research. When the time comes for drafting the prospectus, you need to be confident that the provisional hypotheses guiding your reading during this later period will not lead to wild-goose chases or reinventions of the wheel. You must also be sure that claims of distinctiveness are not being made for texts that are in fact rather typical and representative in the period, or, vice versa, that claims of representativeness are not being made for texts that are in fact anomalous or idiosyncratic.

In order to avoid such misjudgments, you will need to have a good grasp of the diversity, character, and scope of the literary and critical texts that define the period you are studying; it is your grasp of this landscape that the second exam is intended to evaluate. While crafting sustained arguments, your answers should also demonstrate specific command of texts and their critical reception and should give evidence of careful thought about the issues that you and your committee identify. Different exam committees and different research projects will call for appropriate variations in principles of selectivity of coverage and in the kinds of questions likely to appear on the exam; students and committees must work toward a shared understanding of these matters ahead of time.

There is no oral component to this exam, and there are four possible results:

- Pass with distinction;
- Pass;
- Revise/Resubmit/Retake;
- Fail.

If your committee members select the third option, they will determine how much of the exam will need to be retaken. If you are to retake half of the exam, you will have 5 days from... the date it is distributed to submit the new essay(s). If the full exam is to be retaken, you will have 10 days. In either case, the exam will be rescheduled such that it will be graded and returned prior to Reading Week in the Spring Quarter.

A Fail will result in your being excluded from the program at the end of the quarter in which the exam is taken. Funding for the following quarter will be forfeited.

3.3.2. The Prospectus

Upon passing the second part of your Qualifying Exam, you will continue work with your committee, the product of which will be your dissertation prospectus. You should meet with your committee members at the beginning of Winter Quarter to work out a course of action, and you should have at least one meeting toward the end of the quarter to review your progress and make sure that there is agreement between you and your committee members on what remains to be done. You should also meet regularly with each member until the prospectus has received his or her final approval.

While much of the work in the Winter Quarter will be concerned with background reading and bibliographical research, it will be important for you to turn in several written drafts of your ideas during this time as well. You are expected to submit a first draft of your Prospectus by the start of the Spring Quarter and to meet with your committee members shortly thereafter. This draft will probably be quite rough, and it may take several more stages of revision before reaching a satisfactorily polished state, but it is important that you commit yourself to a topic firmly and early.

3.3.2.1. The Format of the Prospectus

The dissertation prospectus establishes a blueprint for the major accomplishment of your career in the doctoral program, the writing of the dissertation. A concise and precise program for the chapter-by-chapter drafting of the dissertation, the prospectus allows both you and your committee to conceive of the dissertation project as a whole. Additionally, the prospectus places the dissertation in the context of current scholarship in the chosen field of study; it thereby indicates how the dissertation contributes to and potentially changes this field. Chiefly, the prospectus gives you an opportunity to anticipate and articulate the thesis of your dissertation: the line of argument it will pursue, the logical articulations linking each section to the others, and the method by which the line of argument will be elaborated by reference to evidentiary materials.

The prospectus should thus accomplish the following:

- describe the topic under consideration and formulate the argument to be proposed;
- identify the methodological principles on the basis of which the research will be conducted;
- specify the scope of the inquiry;
- briefly explain the relation of the dissertation to major scholarly achievements and contemporary trends in the field;
- outline the chapters, with a brief exposition of what each one seeks to accomplish;
- provide an extensive bibliography that includes both primary and secondary material.

The bibliography is especially important; indeed, the entire prospectus is contained, so to speak, in its bibliography. Different fields require different kinds of bibliographies, with different degrees of inclusiveness. But, in general, a bibliography should include every item that would make a difference to the dissertation. Because the prospectus is a formal, professional document, the bibliography should be presented in formal bibliographical style.

In general, a prospectus is about 5,000 words double-spaced (roughly 14–18 pages) in length, not including the bibliography. The GPA maintains a file of approved prospectuses which you are encouraged to consult.

3.3.2.2. Approval of the Prospectus

When the members of your dissertation committee judge the completed draft of your prospectus to be acceptable, it will be forwarded to the DGS who will review each in order to maintain uniform standards across fields. After reviewing the prospectus, the DGS will either approve it or, in cases where the document is judged to require substantial revisions, send it back for emendation and resubmission. The DGS will convey their decisions to all students in writing at the end of the Spring Quarter.

Prospectuses must be approved by your committee no later than June 15th (the date may vary by a day or two if the 15th falls on a weekend) in the Spring Quarter of your third year. If sent back for revision, your committee must confirm their approval no later than one week before the beginning of the Fall Quarter of your fourth year, at which point it will be reevaluated by the DGS, who will notify you of their decision. You should not assume your prospectus has been approved until you receive a letter to this effect.

3.3.3. Admission to Candidacy

Admission to candidacy is a benchmark set by TGS indicating that you have met all degree requirements with the exception of the dissertation (thus the term “ABD,” or “All But Dissertation”). You will advance to candidacy if you have met the Period and Language Requirements, finished all course work and incomplete grades, completed an approved prospectus, and passed both parts of the Qualifying Exam. No student may advance to candidacy with an incomplete on his or her record. The Graduate Program Assistant will inform you of the specific procedures to be followed.

TGS requires that you achieve candidacy by the end of the first week of classes following your twelfth quarter in the program, and it will place you on probationary status if you do not meet this requirement. Students on probation will have two quarters to complete required work; failure to do so will result in exclusion from TGS and from the Department.

The English Department requires that you achieve candidacy before making use of any quarters of funding from your “5th-year” fellowship. It also considers meeting the TGS deadline to be a requisite for continued access to department travel and/or research funds of any kind.

Finally, a delay in your advance to candidacy restricts you from beginning work on your dissertation with your committee’s advice. Until all requirements for candidacy are completed, the members of your prospectus committee may only advise you regarding those requirements still outstanding. Your sole focus at such a time must be the completion of whatever work is preventing you from advancing.

Regardless of when you achieve candidacy, you will continue registering for TGS 500 - Advanced Doctoral Study, and will continue to do so in any quarter in which you are receiving funding. If you are unfunded as a result of a late advance to candidacy, you will register instead for TGS 512 - Continuous Registration, which enables you to maintain minimal residency status.

3.4. The Fourth Year of the Doctoral Program

Once you are admitted to candidacy, your progress toward the degree will depend very much on your own pace and initiative. While we would like you to make significant progress toward completing your dissertation by the end of your fifth year, it is not uncommon for students to take three more years to finish. To ensure that you are proceeding at an appropriate pace, it is vital that you stay in touch with your committee during the writing phase.

Although you need not publish in order to get a job, a well-placed publication always strengthens your credentials. We strongly urge you to submit some version of a dissertation chapter for publication, ideally, in time for the piece to be accepted (not necessarily published) before your job search gets in full swing. You should plan to consult closely with your committee in this effort. On occasion a seminar paper written in your first two years of study will lend itself to being worked up for publication. In many cases, such a paper will also function as a draft for a dissertation chapter.

3.4.1. The Dissertation Committee

In writing your dissertation you will be guided by your committee, who will be both advisers in the process of research and composition and judges of the final product. As stated on the Admission to Candidacy page of the TGS website, “The [Dissertation] Examination Committee must include no fewer than three full-time members of the Northwestern University faculty, two of whom, including the [committee] chair, must be members of the Graduate Faculty.” With the approval of TGS, a faculty member who leaves the University may still serve as one of the three full-time Northwestern faculty members. As long as the core committee composition is in accordance with TGS guidelines, a specialist from another university may be asked to serve as a fourth reader as well.

3.4.2. The Prospectus and the Dissertation

It is useful to think of your Prospectus as a memorandum of understanding between you and your committee about your dissertation. The Prospectus is not a contract specifying provisions to be fulfilled. You will undoubtedly change your mind on many aspects of your dissertation as you proceed, and your committee members will expect such changes. But you must seek their advice and approval if you envisage substantial departures from the scope or method of your original proposal, and you must incorporate such changes in an amended prospectus. Such formal revision of the Prospectus is especially important if you intend to reduce the scope of your dissertation, delete authors and topics, or make significant changes in your coverage and treatment of secondary literature.

In general, it will be your responsibility to keep your committee informed of what you are doing and to make sure that they will read your dissertation as a realization of plans they have had a chance to ponder and approve.

If your project undergoes truly radical revisions that are approved by your committee, you should consider submitting an updated Prospectus (or addendum to the original) to the Graduate Program Assistant for the archives, so that your work is being accurately reflected.

3.4.3. Communication with your Committee

Formally, your communication with your committee will be through your dissertation director, who chairs your committee and has the major responsibility for supervising your progress. It is the director’s responsibility to make sure that the parts of your dissertation are presented to the committee in a sufficiently coherent and substantial form to permit evaluation and advice. No member of your committee is required to read any part of your dissertation until it has been reviewed by the director.

While your dissertation director has the leading role as your adviser, all members of your committee are equal judges of the final product, and each member must certify by his or her signature that he or she is willing to accept your work as meeting the standards for a doctoral dissertation in the English Department of Northwestern University.

Within this framework, it will be up to you to develop a relationship with your committee that will work best for your dissertation. Some candidates will work mainly with their director, with other members of the committee serving primarily as reviewers. There may be other cases in which interests and expertise on the committee are balanced in such a way that all members are actively involved at all stages of the dissertation. Whatever particular relationship you develop, it will be important for you to get your committee’s criticism and advice on the bulk of your dissertation sufficiently early to take full advantage of it.

3.4.4. Changes in your Dissertation Committee

If a member of your committee leaves the University or resigns from your committee, the DGS will appoint a replacement after consultation with you, your committee, and the GPC. If you would like a faculty member who has left the University to continue on your committee and the faculty member has agreed to do so, the GPC will normally comply with your request if your dissertation is well underway, within the restrictions defined by TGS.

3.4.5. Time Span for Reading Dissertation Chapters

Your committee members have an obligation to read individual chapters of your dissertation within three weeks, but you are required to give them advance warning of your timetable in order for them to meet this schedule. If you plan to hand in an entire dissertation at once, you must provide a month’s notice if you expect the three-week rule to be followed.

Your committee members also have an obligation to read your dissertation while they are on leave. During leave and the summer months, it is up to you to keep in touch with them to make sure that they have enough advanced notice to allow them the time necessary to do their work. You should work out a schedule for contacting them during the quarter preceding their going on leave or the end of the academic year, given that many faculty members leave the city/country fairly quickly.

3.4.6. Preparation of the Dissertation

Submission of your dissertation to TGS will be performed electronically. Information on the process can be found on TGS’s website, especially in the Degree Requirements section of the Student Services page. You must consult the TGS website for the latest information on submission requirements and guidelines. You should, however, give hard copies of the dissertation to each member of your committee. The Department has funds available to assist in the printing and photocopying, so be sure to speak to the Graduate Program Assistant when the time comes.

In preparing your dissertation, the Department and TGS both require you to follow the latest edition of an approved model of scholarly citation with care and accuracy. You may choose The Chicago Manual of Style, the MLA Handbook for Writers of Research Papers, The Thesis Writer’s Handbook, Publication Manual of the American Psychological Association, or Kate Turabian’s A Manual for Writers of Term Papers, Theses, and Dissertations. TGS has further formatting requirements, which can be found on their website. Your director is required to review your dissertation for scholarly accuracy and careful editing and to sign a certificate approving it before you receive your degree. It is very much to your advantage to choose one of the approved formats for footnotes and bibliography for your dissertation early on and to follow it meticulously throughout the stages of preparing your dissertation.

3.4.7. Dissertation Defense and Assessment

Your last examination as a degree candidate will be the oral defense of your dissertation. After this examination, your committee will comment on your dissertation, assessing in reasonable detail its strengths and weaknesses, making recommendations concerning possible publication, and, of most immediate concern, recommending whatever final editing needs to be done prior to submission of the dissertation to TGS.

In either case, submission of the fully edited dissertation to TGS is the final requirement that must be fulfilled before you are eligible to graduate. Though specific dates will vary from year to year, you should be prepared to submit the finalized dissertation to TGS at least six weeks prior to the graduation date in question. Spring graduation (including the Hooding Ceremony) is held in mid-June, while fall degrees are awarded at the end of December. Students earning a fall degree may participate in the Hooding Ceremony the following spring if they so desire.

3.4.8. Time Limits

We hope very much that you will never have a need to worry about TGS regulations concerning time limits for the Ph.D., let alone the provision for an extension. You should be aware, however, that these rules are firmly administered and that extensions require additional registrations for which the Department cannot provide fellowships. Consult the TGS website for the most recent update to these regulations.

As of March 23, 2007, the graduate faculty policy was as follows: “Each doctoral student must complete all requirements for the Ph.D. by an established deadline. Graduate Faculty legislation states the following: All requirements for the doctoral degree must be met within nine years of initial registration in a doctoral program.

“Students who do not expect to meet the nine-year deadline may petition TGS to extend the deadline. The petition must be based on a meeting between the student and the dissertation committee, in which the student reviews the progress made on the dissertation and proposes a timetable for completion during the period of the extension. All members of the dissertation committee must sign the petition for a deadline extension. If TGS approves the petition, the student will have up to two additional years to complete all requirements for the Ph.D. degree. A student on extension is not eligible for a teaching assistantship, University fellowship, or graduate research assistant tuition scholarship.”
Additionally,

“Beginning in Fall 2008, doctoral students after nine years from first term of enrollment and master’s students after five years from first term of enrollment are required to maintain their affiliation with Northwestern by registering for TGS 513, Advanced Continuous Registration. Students must maintain this registration until completion of all degree requirements. Students are required to register for Fall, Winter, and Spring Quarters; the Summer Quarter is excluded. Any lapse in registration must be paid in full, including appropriate retroactive registration fees, or no degree will be awarded nor will a transcript be released. Students in this advanced continuous registration status are not eligible to receive federal loans or to qualify for the university health insurance subsidy, nor will they be eligible for fellowships, traineeships, teaching or research assistantships, and scholarships. This status is considered less than half-time and therefore does not provide students with the ability to defer loans or extend visas. Tuition for TGS 513 is currently $1,000 per quarter.”

In practical terms, this means that you will have until the end of your ninth Summer Quarter (mid-September) to submit a completed, fully-edited and committee-approved dissertation. In all but the rarest cases, only a medical leave of absence will shift this deadline. These are matters of serious concern, and though the Graduate Program Assistant will help as much as possible with reminders, we ask that you be very careful to keep track of these deadlines.

3.5. CLS/English Ph.D. Requirements

Ph.D. Students in the Comparative Literary Studies Program (CLS) whose home department is English must meet the following requirements:

- CLS/English students must take six graduate seminar in English.
- CLS/English students do not undergo the first-year review or the second-year oral qualifying exam (QE1) in English.
- CLS/English students undertake the written qualifying exam (QE2) on the same schedule as English graduate students, to wit:
  - the QE2 reading list will be approved by the committee and submitted to the English DGS for review one week before the start of Fall Quarter of the third year;
  - the Written Exam will be administered at the start of the Fall Quarter Thanksgiving Break in most years.

Consult section 3.3., The Third Year of the Doctoral Program, for further information on these third-year requirements.

4. FUNDING & ASSISTANTSHIPS

4.1. Funding in Years Two through Five

University Fellowships and Graduate Assistantships are available only to students admitted to the doctoral program. The Department provides support through the fifth year for every doctoral student who has been continued into the second year and who remains in good standing in subsequent years. Additionally, funding will be provided in your first four summers, under the same restrictions listed above.

Funding between the second and fourth years will take the form of Graduate Assistantships, with up to one quarter per year of fellowship, while your fifth year is covered by a University Fellowship (as in your first year). This leaves you free of Departmental responsibilities in the fifth year, affording you much more time to dedicate to the writing of your dissertation.

Recommendation of continuation from the Department is prerequisite to the award of a Graduate Assistantship and all other forms of fellowship that involve Northwestern University funds. In addition, TGS requires that you be in good academic standing to be a Graduate Assistant. This is defined as having at least a B average and no more than one incomplete grade.

Other circumstances that may jeopardize or otherwise negatively impact university funding include:

- failing to make up incompletes by two weeks before the beginning of the Fall Quarter;
- not achieving candidacy before the beginning of the fourth year, whether because of still-standing incompletes, an unfinished Language Requirement, or failure to submit a prospectus that your committee and the DGS consider acceptable.

It is important to remember that TGS expects you to apply for external aid during this period, and strongly encourages you to pursue external funding at least once by the end of your fourth year in the program. External fellowship applications during year five at the latest are required.

4.2. Support Beyond the Fifth Year

In conjunction with Graduate Assistantships available via either TGS or WCAS, the Department also makes every effort to assist students in obtaining funding beyond the fifth year, provided the student continues to remain in good academic standing and make significant progress toward the degree. Advanced students, in turn, are encouraged to apply for external funding in their fifth and sixth years. Doctoral students beyond their fourth year have frequently been able to secure part-time appointments in Northwestern’s School of Continuing Education and the Writing Program, chiefly for the teaching of composition. The demand for such teachers is unlikely to slacken, but the state of the job market has made such opportunities rarer than they used to be. It is fair to say that the School of Continuing Studies gives some preference in its appointments to qualified Northwestern doctoral students, but it is important to remember that all appointments of this kind are at the discretion of the Dean of the School of Continuing Studies.

4.3. Fellowships

Major Northwestern Fellowships

On an annual basis, TGS conducts a university-wide competition open only to students who are in candidacy for the Presidential Fellowship, the most prestigious graduate award given at Northwestern. Based on the application and supporting letters submitted to the GPC, the Department nominates one student each year for the award. Applications for the Presidential Fellowship must be submitted to your committee by the beginning of the academic year in the Fall Quarter. The DGS will publicize the exact dates and provide information about the process to all eligible students. Please be aware that a writing sample which reflects work on your dissertation is required to make you a competitive candidate, both within the department and in TGS.

4.4. Other Grants

There are various sources of funding inside and outside the University to help you with extraordinary expenses for research travel, travel to professional conferences to deliver papers, and research-related expenses. Announcements of grants are posted regularly, and the Department website has links to grant sources online. Ask the Graduate Program Assistant if you’re having difficulty finding the correct page.

4.5. Good Standing Notifications

Graduate Assistantships and other fellowship commitments by WCAS and TGS are subject to your remaining in good standing as a full-time student, as explained above.

The English Department is required to notify every student active in the program (all those still within their nine-year dissertation deadline) of their standing at the end of each academic year. The letters indicating the passage of the First Year Review, the Oral Qualifying Exam, and the Prospectus are considered indicators of good standing. If a student’s standing is in question, she will receive a letter spelling out in precise terms the conditions which must be met to restore her status in the Department. Ninth-year students will be contacted separately early in the year to establish whether they intend to defend within the time limit declared by TGS and to help put together a time table for completion.

5. OTHER MATTERS

5.1. Department Organization

The Graduate Program of the Department of English operates under the authority and rules of TGS. Responsibility for curricular matters, admissions, fellowships, and other academic and financial matters rests with the graduate faculty of the Department, but much of the day-to-day business is delegated to the GPC. The DGS is the executive officer of the Graduate Program.

The GPC is advised by two graduate student representatives from the English Graduate Student Organization (EGSO), elected by the graduate students for one-year terms (see below). While they cannot take part in the evaluations performed by the GPC (nomination/prize deliberations, first-year reviews, ratification of exam results, syllabus feedback, and any other reviews of graduate progress), graduate GPC members will participate in all policy deliberations. Graduate membership in the GPC is non-voting.

5.2. English Graduate Student Organization and Other Activities

The English Graduate Student Organization operates with two co-chairs, each elected for one-year terms, along with elected representatives for students in coursework and those in candidacy. EGSO shall also annually elect two graduate students to serve on the GPC for a term of one year, which can be renewed. If possible, one graduate member of the GPC will be in coursework and the other will have already advanced to candidacy.

EGSO’s activities and liveliness depend on you, but the Department will provide funds to support its social and intellectual ambitions. Traditionally, EGSO has provided assistance both during the recruiting phase of admissions and during the campus visits by job candidates, along with organizing colloquia, reading groups, and less strictly academic social activities.

You will also want to make it a point to attend some of the many lectures by faculty from Northwestern and other institutions and to congregate for discussion with other faculty and students at the receptions that usually follow such events. Attending talks by visiting speakers is an important part of your intellectual training, for these expose you to current research undertaken by scholars and to the protocols of scholarly conversation and debate. While it may seem that your coursework and other tasks take up all of your time, the Department strongly encourages you to attend these events. You will certainly be expected to do so if you take an academic job and participating in such conversations can prepare you for future job interviews.
5.3. Placement Services

Ideally, graduate training in literary scholarship culminates in the attainment of a tenure-track job at a research university or a liberal arts college. While the vicissitudes of a difficult job market complicate the achievement of this goal, we believe that two vital milestones reached before graduation will put students in the strongest possible position: 1) a provocative and original dissertation, completed in time to be mentioned in outgoing job letters, and 2) publication of an article in an important journal in the field.

The Placement Coordinator, your dissertation director along with your other professors and advisers, and the departmental faculty in general aim to provide all possible assistance to Ph.D. candidates and graduates who are seeking academic positions. The Placement Coordinator will arrange workshops for putting together CVs and letters of application for positions, review confidential parts of your dossier, conduct practice interviews to help you prepare for actual interviews at MLA, hold mock job talks for those invited for campus visits, and are available for consultation about other issues as they arise. It is important that students who plan to go on the fall job market begin compiling a job application file (CV, job letter, statement of Teaching Philosophy) during the summer, in consultation with their dissertation director. The year’s placement calendar will be available from the Graduate Program Assistant by the beginning of the summer.

Going on the job market is, ultimately, much like taking on a full-time job, with commensurate demands on your time. Do your best to plan for the demands the process will make on you, especially if you are still working to finish any substantial portion of your final dissertation at the same time. We are strongly committed to doing all we can both to train you well and to help you find a position, so don’t hesitate to look to us for assistance.
